Belmonte Defeats Rash in First PBA Super Clash

PBA Tour rivalry showcased in three-game head-to-head made-for-TV matchup on ESPN

ALLEN PARK – The Professional Bowlers Association's fiercest rivalry between the two most recent PBA Players of the Year took center stage on ESPN in a Super Bowl Sunday head-to-head battle. In the end, 2012-13 PBA Player of the Year Jason Belmonte claimed an overall victory over 2011-12 Player of the Year Sean Rash in the inaugural PBA Super Clash.

The PBA Super Clash at Thunderbowl Lanes consisted of three games with the winner of each game earning $2,000 and the player accumulating the highest three-game pinfall total winning a $10,000 grand prize.

The duel didn't disappoint with Belmonte winning game one, 258-238. Rash turned the tables in the second game, 258-241, with Belmonte taking a three-pin lead into the final match.

While both players had potentially game-changing splits that resulted in open frames – Rash left the unusual 3-4-6-7 in the fourth and Belmonte an equally rare 6-7-9 in the sixth – Belmonte was able to maintain the edge with four-strike strings from the second through fifth frames and again from the seventh through 10th frames to win the final match, 244-222, and the overall match, 743-718.

While Belmonte enjoyed the spoils of a Clash win that came on the heels of winning the 2014 Barbasol PBA Tournament of Champions, his thoughts turned to the potential of the event and how much PBA fans would like to see that kind of rivalry play out in the future.

"I don't want to lose the traditional way we compete on tour, but if the sport needs something like this to build momentum, I think it's great," said Belmonte. "In this case you had two people who don't particularly like each other competing head-to-head and, as a participant, I thought it was pretty exciting. But ultimately it will be up to the fans and how they like it."

Belmonte also believed the made-for-TV event might provide an opportunity to showcase matchups fans would like to see more often.

"You could have a Walter Ray (Williams Jr.) vs. Pete Weber match-up or whoever," Belmonte, a two-handed player, added. "There's an opportunity with this kind of event to bring different types of bowlers together to see how they match up. I'll bowl anyone and I know most of the guys out here feel the same way."

"This is another way to think about bowling if we need to incorporate some more entertainment," Belmonte added. "Again, I want to keep tradition, but if this can help us, I'm all for it." Like Belmonte, Rash also likes the potential for the clash format.

"I think everybody saw a good show and I hope the fans enjoyed it," Rash said. "This is something we talked about doing for a while, just waiting for the right opportunity. 'It's a great idea and you can put together some great clashes.'"

During the telecast fans also were able to see point-of-view video images from Belmonte via "Belmo-Vision" – provided by his Google Glass headset. Belmonte used the innovative wearable computer that provides 720 dpi video for the first time during Tournament of Champions qualifying.

Glenn Allison's 900 was and still is, the most respected of all 900 Series!

from the 1982 Sports Illustrated - Story by John Garrity

WHITTIER — This is the story of a man who wants immortality and a bureaucracy that says he can't have it. Glenn Allison is a 52-year-old liquor-store manager from Whittier, Calif. He has sad eyes and a warm smile. Allison works a 60-hour week at Ron's Wines 'n' Spirits on Leffingwell Avenue in Whittier, on the border between Los Angeles and Orange counties. There he sells margarita mix to young women in shorts. They have no idea that Allison is a retired professional bowler—a winner of four ABC championships, five Professional Bowlers Association titles, and a member of the ABC Hall of Fame. He doesn't tell them.

He follows the Rams, the Dodgers and the Lakers on a portable TV he keeps behind the counter; he smokes a pack and a half of Carltons a day, drives a 1968 Buick and plays golf at a municipal course on weekend afternoons. He's a self-described "three-time loser" in marriage, which may account for the sad eyes, and he lives in a house that's owned by his older brother, Bob, and his sister-in-law, Wilma.

On Thursday nights he bowls with his relatives. Allison's run at immortality began at nine o'clock on the night of Thursday, July 1, 1982 with the first frame of Anchor Girl Trio League play at the La Habra 300 Bowl. Before he threw his first ball Allison had, à la Babe Ruth pointing at the centerfield fence, told his girl friend, Jessie Thompson, he'd roll her a 300 game for her birthday. At nine sharp he bowled a strike.

At about 9:30, Bob Allison, a 61-year-old design engineer for a tool company, left Wilma in the bowling alley's restaurant, promising to be right back. Every few minutes she heard muffled cheers over the din of falling pins. She wanted to go see what was happening, but she had no money to pay the tab. When Bob did come back, he was flushed and excited. "Glenn just threw a 300 game!"

Wilma hustled to the lanes, leaving Bob to pay the check. She found Glenn standing before Lanes 13 and 14, chatting with her son, Ron. Glenn had already bowled two frames into the next game—both strikes. With a glass of Crown Royal in one hand and a close-lipped smile of contentment on his face, he appeared totally relaxed. He greeted Wilma and nodded to Jessie, "anchor girl" for the opposing team on the lanes.

"It isn't fair," Wilma said. "I've never seen a 300 game!" "Well, there's always the chance I'll throw another," Glenn said.

Thirty minutes later Allison gracefully launched his 24th consecutive ball into the pocket, gave a little arm pump as the pins crashed and walked back to the growing cluster of amazed bowlers who were looking on. His smile was broader. He exchanged hand slaps with his teammates and relatives and got a big hug from Jessie. His sad eyes twinkled. He had bowled two straight 300 games.

For the next half an hour, whenever Allison stepped onto the approach to Lane 13 or 14, the La Habra 300 Bowl fell eerily silent. Bowlers on the 30 other lanes waited respectfully. Waitresses tiptoed by with their trays of beer. Once Allison's ball was safely on its way, the quiet was broken as cries and exhortations accompanied it into the pocket; shouts, yelps and applause greeted each crash of pins.

Strike 5. Strike 6. Strike 7. When the pins scattered convincingly for Allison in the eighth frame, he twisted through the noisy tangle of spectators, drink in hand, and found his brother. "I'm nervous," he said in Bob's ear. "My knees are shaking."

Allison's knees had just caught up with the stomachs of most of his audience. He was on the brink of bowling the highest competitive series in history. Two more strikes would practically guarantee the eclipse of Allie Brandt's record 886 series, shot in 1939.

Allison's nervousness didn't show on ball nine, which hooked into the pocket with the same sure tempo as the 32 that had preceded it, striking again. But ball 10 ran fast and straight. Those who weren't holding their breath groaned, for Allison's "oozer" was too high. Allison, poised at the foul line, winced as his ball crunched the head pin. The head pin leaped out of the crashing pack, ricocheted off the sidewall, smacked the 4-pin, which bumped the lonely 9-pin, which wobbled... and fell. Which left everyone limp with relief and incredulity. And made Allison believe in destiny.

That settled, he calmly rolled two more balls into the pocket for his 35th and 36th consecutive strikes, his third consecutive 300 game and the first 900 series in sanctioned competition. (Two 900 series were rolled in "friendly competition" back in the '30s. These aren't officially recognized because they weren't bowled in formal play.)

At this point Allison stopped being calm and fell to his knees. He made it to a seat and disappeared under a mob of pummeling well-wishers. When he finally emerged from the jubilant crowd there were tears in his eyes. "There were a lot of grown men who cried that night," one witness recalls.

A week or two after Allison had bowled the 900 series, Mickey Curley, general manager of La Habra 300 Bowl, mounted Allison's portrait over Lanes 13 and 14. In the picture he lounges, centerfold fashion, on a bowling lane with his bowling ball at his side. Under the photograph are three small gold stars, each emblazoned with the number 300, followed by one big star with a 900 on it and the legend Glenn Allison 7-1-82. The pin-sweeps, which normally carry a Brunswick logo, proclaim Glenn Allison instead. Lanes 13 and 14 are a shrine to bowling perfection.

Actually, they are a battleground. The ABC, after inspecting Lanes 13 and 14, refused to sanction the 900 series, citing lane-dressing conditions that were not "in compliance with Article 7, Section 3" of the rule book. Local inspectors had checked the lanes almost immediately after Allison's series, around midnight and again at 10:50 a.m. on July 2. Later that day Kellermann flew to California from ABC headquarters in Milwaukee to verify the initial findings.

He met with the inspectors in an office at the La Habra 300 Bowl, and on the morning of July 3 indicated to Curley he would recommend that the ABC not recognize the 900 series. Allison was granted a month to submit material supporting the validity of the score. On Sept. 3 ABC Executive Secretary-Treasurer Roger Tessman announced that, given the evidence, the ABC had to rule against him, but that Allison still had the right to appeal. This he did, in person, but last week the appeal was rejected. He is now preparing to take the matter to court.

Allison's 900 series was the ultimate provocation in a controversy over high scores and bowling standards that has polarized the sport for almost two decades. Critics of the ABC have long argued that lane-dressing standards are vague and arbitrarily policed and that the ABC is too hidebound to admit it. Bowlers in ABC-sanctioned leagues have written letters and signed petitions to the ABC demanding that Allison's feat be recognized. "Pardon us if we suspect that Allie Brandt's record is sacrosanct to your august body..." reads a petition drawn up during a tournament at the Canoga Park (Calif.) Bowl. "Glenn Allison's 900 series may never be sanctioned by the ABC, but it will forever be sanctioned in the hearts and minds of millions of bowlers and sports fans as a superb and heroic achievement."

"I think it's a remarkable feat," says star PBA bowler Earl Anthony. "It's like a golfer hitting three or four straight holes in one." Anthony is distressed, as are many of Allison's peers, that a bowler's greatest moment can be wiped out with the flourish of a ballpoint pen. "My opinion is, when a bowler comes into a bowling center for an ABC-sanctioned league, he comes in good faith. He's paid his dues. So when he bowls a score, I feel he should be sanctioned automatically. If something is wrong, the ABC should punish the bowling center, not the bowler."

The outcry in favor of Allison's 900 series represents a curious reversal for those persistent ABC critics who have long lambasted the governing body for encouraging inflated scores. Bowling averages now are an estimated 10 to 15 pins better than mid-'60s scores, a phenomenon blamed by many on the ABC's approval of lighter and bouncier double-voiced bowling pins (the new pins have two interior air spaces; the older ones were solid) and softer balls that tend to grip the lanes better. Close to 6,000 perfect games were bowled last year, according to the ABC, compared to 1,900 five years ago, with no appreciable increase in the number of lines bowled.

Allison, whose bowling prime predated the cheap-score era, says, "I would be the first to admit that in the mid-'60s there's no way I could have carried 36 straight strikes against the pins of that time. If you go back 10 years more, I might have missed three or four strikes with the same hits. But the ABC is responsible for this current rise in scores through its sanctioning of the pins, the lanes and the bowling balls."

That the 900 series should be wiped out by an "administrative denial" bewilders and annoys the Allison faithful. "I know those lanes were legal that night," insists Gene Rogers, La Habra's lane manager at the time, who feels his integrity has been impugned by the ABC lane report. Bob Allison, admitting to fraternal prejudice, says, "Glenn bowled a 578 series in the early league the same night. If conditions were so easy, why didn't he bowl 900 twice?"

"It should go down as one of the greatest athletic feats of all time, like Joe DiMaggio's consecutive game hitting streak," argues six-time PBA champion Andy Marzich. "It's like a golfer going for 10 holes in one. It's mind-boggling."

A quiet man, not given to argument, Allison pleads his own case with an amiable firmness that never slips into rancor. "I've always had a good relationship with the American Bowling Congress and I think they've been great for bowling," he says. "But I think they're making a mistake. I want to rectify that mistake, and I want to fight for my rights."

The ABC's lane reports don't settle the question for Allison, who went to bed early in the morning of July 2 satisfied he had made bowling history. "Their statement was that the lanes didn't meet with ABC specifications per paragraph such and such," he says, "but there were no specifics as to what was wrong. I have all the charts that were made by the ABC officials. We've had them read by other people, knowledgeable people, and they feel there was nothing wrong."

Marzich, a friend and onetime Falstaff teammate of Allison's, voices the feeling of the many tour veterans who are against high scores, but are for Allison. "It's not fair to give an opinion based on emotion or personalities," he says carefully. "But my good buddy Glenn wouldn't lie to anybody, and it's his opinion that those weren't tricked lanes. And he's bowled on plenty of 'em, in St. Louis, in Chicago, wherever. If he feels they were honest, I've got to go with Glenn."

Board 20 is dead center on a 39-board lane of the sort found at La Habra 300 Bowl. To get to the heart of the lane-dressing controversy, it makes sense to start in the middle of a bowling lane. The full length of a typical modern lane is coated with a tough, nonflammable, urethane finish, topped for the first 40 or so feet from the foul line with a polish called "oil." This lane dressing was introduced out of necessity in the 1960s, when urethane replaced lacquer finishes on lanes: Bowling proprietors found the new surfaces so "dry" that ball friction damaged the lanes and affected the bowlers' shots. The answer was a thin film of oil applied daily to the first 40 feet of the lane.

On an oiled lane, conditions referred to as "ice" and "rug" prevail. A bowling ball skids and spins on the oil until it hits the rug, the unoiled final 20 feet to the head pin, where friction suddenly converts the ball's erratic action to roll, hook or curve. Every ball thrown picks up oil from the dressed area and carries it downlane; hence the term "track" for the relatively dry path that is worn through the oil in a few hours of bowling. For the average righthanded bowler, the track is in the area from the seventh to the 14th board, counting from the right edge.

"Most houses run their oil from the foul lines to about 45 feet," explains Rogers, "but I disagree with that. I think you must get the ball into a hook pattern earlier to make better scores. I feel that 30 feet of oil is all you need. It gets you into a roll earlier so the ball has more momentum when it hits the pins."

Rogers points out the track on Lane 13, a relatively dull-looking path through the gleaming oil. "A 'crown' is legal," he says. "You're allowed a 2-to-1 ratio—two times the amount of oil in the middle as on the outside of a lane—because the bowlers play basically in the middle and wear it down faster. But the night in question, the ABC says there wasn't enough oil from, say, the seventh or eighth board to the edge. That's the amazing thing. They say there wasn't enough oil outside the eighth board."

He kneels down. "Any time you get a dry condition through here [he points at Boards 1 through 8 on the right edge of the lane] and a heavy oil condition over here [he points at the track] you're creating what they call a wall. The ball doesn't want to go over, so it rides the oil till it hits the drier boards, where it'll turn in hard, which will tend to make it hit the pocket. That's the whole thing their case is built on—the amount of oil from the outside to the inside. They're saying it was too dry here and too oily there."

The wall condition isn't always accidental, and bowling proprietors are often accused of lane doctoring to boost scores. Oil is applied to a bowling lane by a knee-high, box-shaped robot that rolls from foul line to pin deck, cleaning, buffing and spewing polish automatically. The depth of the oil at any board can be controlled by adjusting the machine.

"Sure," Rogers says with a shrug, "I know how to set up a lane outside if I want to set it up. I can make it as easy or as tough as I want to. But to make a true wall condition, you usually need to go 40 feet or so with oil. You run a heavy strip right down the middle. I don't do that." He shakes his head. "I just don't know how they got their readings."

Rogers contends that at the first inspection the spring-loaded "lane analyzer" gauge was mis-handled or misread by the ABC's field representatives; that they tested an insufficient number of boards; and that later tests conducted by the ABC resulted in readings that were inconsistent with the first ones. "I get hot about it," he says, looking pained. "We had a 299 here about a month and a half earlier, and the ABC okayed it. We had a 300 here last Saturday and they okayed that."

"I tell you, the La Habra lanes that night were legal." Rogers admits that his claims carry no more weight than any other interested observer's. Taking his own measurements after Allison's 900 would have constituted "tampering," and tests conducted days after the event are considered invalid because of changes in temperature and humidity and the inevitable deterioration of the oil condition.

48 bowlers qualified for the semi finals, the top 16 advance to our single game elimination finals. Top Seed is Mark Andrews with +129 followed by Richard Valdez with +116. Richard gets a first round bye while Mark waits for the title match. Top Seed gets the privilege of drawing for our Match Game and the 128 drawn is also unmatched! ALL POTS CARRY OVER TO OUR ANNUAL VEGAS EVENT HOSTED BY STRIKE ZONE BOWLING CENTER AT SUNSET STATION and it will be estimated at $5,000. First round eliminates 7 bowlers followed by 4 more after the second round. Our third round introduces our Horse Finalists with payouts of $42 for Richard Valdez, $62 for Emilio Flores, $91 for Beth Borci and $137 for Pat Manalo. Richard blew away Emilio with 284/193 while Beth and Pat had to do a 9th/10th frame roll off. Beth advances as Pat failed to pick up his spare in the 10th. Fourth round match was Beth Borci downing Richard Valdez with 253/189. HORSE winner is Beth Borci while Richard Valdez gets 3rd place for $205.

Beth, one of our Finest Bowlers is on a roll, and advanced to meet Top Seed Mark Andrews for the title match where Mark showed how he earned his spot at the top. He carried his shots and Beth Borci after winning 4 straight tough matches did her best but got no breaks in the title game and placed 2nd for $500 with her 217 game. Mark Andrews, with his Big 271 game, gets his 2nd ABTA Title and the guaranteed prize fund of $1000 plus an additional $1700 for investing in the optional Cash & Carry.

Two time Champ Mark Andrews is from Ontario and he used his Ebonite ball drilled by Hall Of Famer Barry Asher. He thanks his grandfather for all the hours spent on coaching and bowling instructions, Jesus Christ ("...for which I would be nowhere without."), Monica, Paul (his cheerleader), Deb Sanders (for the extra push), and Elvira (for putting on a great tournament and Bowlm for being a Great host).

Runner-up Beth Borci is from Anaheim and she used her Storm Sync drilled by ABTA Member Ben Mach. She is married to fellow ABTA bowler, Anthony and they have 5 grandchildren. She sends her thanks to her family, especially her husband Anthony, and to Bowlm Lanes for hosting the tournament. Beth is on her way to Las Vegas with us!:=)

The Perfect Game

by Steve Felege
A New Year resolution completed by Carol (Big Mama) Mancini

Carol: Well Stevie.....Mission accomplished!

Steve: What do you mean?

Carol: We promised to help our readers get better, and it’s happening! This week I got phone calls, emails, and a marriage proposal; all because of these articles about adjusting.

Steve: A marriage proposal? Who....

Carol: Never mind that! The point is that since we started talking about changing things up a bit, a lot of readers have followed our advice and they’re getting excited about bowling again.

Steve: That doesn’t surprise me. Carrying the same average year after year is boring. Trying new techniques and equipment adds to the fun and excitement only this sport provides.

Carol: We ended our last article saying there are “other things” a bowler can adjust. Why don’t we pick up where we left off?

Steve: Good idea. We had already covered changing the ball’s trajectory by moving the stance to the left or right.

Carol: Absolutely! What other tips do you have?

Steve: Well, all bowlers need to know this: A delivery is comprised of four basic skills coordinated with the necessary footwork. All of those skills can be modified, and each modification will change the behavior of the ball.

Carol: How about giving our readers some specifics?

Steve: Gladly! A bowler can:

- adjust the stance closer to, or farther back from the foul line. Closer makes the ball hook sooner; farther back makes the ball hook later.
- modify the push-away. A lower push-away slows the ball; a higher one speeds the ball up.
- adjust the direction of the arm-swing by altering the wrist position (that’s really important). Various other wrist positions also affect a ball’s rev-rate and hook potential.
- modify the length of the lane. It’s sixty feet from the foul line to the center of the head-pin, but you don’t have to use all of it. You can set the ball down earlier or pitch it out farther. The longer the ball contacts the lane, the more time it has to hook. Conversely, less lane means less hook.
- change equipment. Today’s balls offer a wider selection of behaviors than ever before.
- modify your equipment. A light sanding prior to competition will add hook to older balls.

Carol: Whoa, whoa, whoa..... Some of that is pretty advanced!

Steve: Yes it is, but since we’re talking about adjustments, we may as well cover the most common ones. If a bowler is resolved to improving, I think it’s important for them to know what elite bowlers practice. I wouldn’t suggest that the average bowler try to modify their footwork. That’s just like asking for trouble.

Carol: Fair enough.

Steve: As I’ve stated before, adjusting is an advanced skill and all advanced skills require practice. Maybe we should talk about how to practice next. That’s always a lot of fun.

Carol: How so?

Steve: Average bowlers tend to be creatures of habit. They get comfortable with a particular style and that’s when they stop progressing. Getting them out of their comfort zone is the only way to restart the learning process. That can be worse than pulling teeth. It’s a real challenge and that’s what I enjoy.

Carol: I’m guessing you have some advice about that, too?

Steve: Just a couple tips.

Carol: We’re almost out of space again so let’s hear them.

Steve: Okay. My favorite tip is about learning to play different lines. It’s a real eye opener. A bowler goes to the lanes and rolls a game on their usual line. For example, let’s say they normally use the second arrow. During the second game, they must use the first arrow. In the third game they must switch to the third arrow and so on. They will quickly see how the ball action varies on the different lines. No matter what, they must stick to it, adjusting their delivery until they achieve success on each new line.

Carol: And if they don’t....?

Steve: They need to come back and try again. This process dumps a lot of information into their subconscious; the part of the brain that solves problems. At some point, they will think of other adjustments to overcome the problems they encountered. That’s a lot of fun to watch, too!

Carol: That’s a lot of frustration.

Steve: Getting frustrated is not a bad thing; it means you still care about your ability. Overcoming those frustrations is a major step to becoming an elite bowler.

Carol: You’re right about that! What else ya got?

Steve: Roll a game that requires real precision; “Ten-to-One”!

Carol: Never heard of it!

Steve: Sure you have. There are 10 pins and ten frames. In the first frame you get one ball to throw a strike. In the next frame you get two balls to knock down nine pins. In other words, you need to leave the head pin standing. In the third frame you must knock down only eight pins, then seven, six, five and so on until you get to the tenth frame. Then, you get to roll one ball to knock down just one pin.

Carol: Oh yeah, I’ve heard of that game. The first two frames score ten points, the next two frames score twenty, then thirty, forty and fifty. A perfect game is 300. We don’t call it “Ten-to-One,” though.

Steve: What do you call it?

Carol: I can’t put that in print!

Steve: I can imagine. Anyway, it’s the most challenging game I’ve ever played and I highly recommend it as a way to improve spare making ability. It definitely breaks the “same-oh, same-oh” habit.

Carol: I think Frank Weiler would approve.

ROUND 4 - WEEK 1

by aka Wonder Woman

DOWNEY — Round Four on the “PBA PATTERN” got off to a win-all or loose-all start. Seven teams played their opponents like Seattle played Denver! SYSCO trampled THE PROFESSIONAL APPROACH 2423 to 2151. Those SYSCO bulldogs will be “nipping at somebody’s heels” every Monday night again this round.

AMATEUR BOWLERS TOUR, on the prawl for the $$$$ attached to their name, toured right over the top of Keystone Lanes. After losing game one by less than a mark, the heart went out of the Keys, and A.B.T. grabbed their five wins.

THREADWORKS — only 1/2 game behind A.B.T.A. over-all — wanted to get plenty of wins in their column, — early. No losing a round by one stinking game, not this time. Paul Varela’s 723 sparked his team to a 5-0 night over A.B.T.A. 2384 to 1886. Don’t know what excuses were being passed around for such a pin difference!

Another 5-0 win flipped PINA’S PIZZA to the top of the sheet. Their games against J.A.T. although low scoring, were at least close. Checking J.A.T. - - - Kurt Arakaki 503, David Yamauchi 523 and Larry Campbell matched Katrina Fujikami’s 526. Next time team!!!

LOS ALTOS TROPHY, third round champs, didn’t lose their winning performance. HEINIKEN lost their first game by one pin, and their second game by 17. They just couldn’t put XXX together and those dam splits didn’t help. So it was 5 for LOS ALTOS, 0 for HEINIKEN.

G.J.C. SERVICES hasn’t made headlines this year, but their 2204 guaranteed them 5-0 over FOREST LANES. Only 2 words for G.J.C. — Chop — Chop. GOOD JOB!

Let’s talk about POWER HOUSE VIDEO GAMES! They have been dead last since September, and only have 40-1/2 wins. Their challengers were HERZOG INSURANCE. Another bottom feeder at 41-1/2. Only game three was close 672/680, Series 1945/2129. There was POWER in the HOUSE! Big 5 for the game keepers.

Paul Varela had a security escort to his car after 3 trips to collect cash from Bea at the desk! 2 side-pots and a first in the Advisors pot. Jon Diso made gas money back to the forest from Game One pot. Keith Laing showed up with a 222 for a piece of the Advisors pot.

Bea has been the Monday night desk person/Ebonite banker since the league started 28 years ago. She knows the bowlers, the bowlers know her (and just how far they can NOT act like some second class bowler.) She expects the best! Thanks Bea!
